Speakers:

Occupational Justice

Dr. Culshaw is a faculty member in the Master of Occupational Therapy program at Moravian College. An occupational therapist helps people with injuries, illnesses, or disabilities develop, recover, and improve the skills needed for daily living and working. Dr. Culshaw has worked in several clinical programs over the years, supporting youth with FASD and their families. She is proud of being an occupational therapist in one of the first adult assessment clinics for FASD in Alberta, Canada, advocating for occupational justice for her clients. Occupational justice is the right to participate in meaningful and purposeful activities for an individual despite physical, social, and environmental barriers.

Activism and FASD Services

Lyn Becker is a FASD Parent Advocate, Activist, and Educator. Lyn's activism focuses on the development of a comprehensive system of care for the prevention, identification/diagnosis and intervention of FASD. As a parent of an individual with a FASD, Lyn understands firsthand how difficult it can be to navigate the healthcare and school systems on behalf of an individual with a FASD.
